

Dear FCC,

I want Net Neutrality rules instituted during the Obama Administration to not only remain in place but be strengthened. There is no unbiased evidence to suggest that getting rid of these rules will foster more choice for me, the consumer, or more competition. In fact I believe the opposite is true.

Internet Service Providers on mobile and to-the-home were ALREADY caught slowing down the bitrate speed for users trying to access Netflix. More of the same is what consumers can expect if the rules are repealed.

Making sure there is no discrimination in the site load speed of the sites I choose to visit is really, really, important to me on the personal level and on the societal level. I believe the diversity of voices on the Internet would shrink if it suddenly cost publishers or viewers/web visitors a fee to make sure that an individual site loaded just as fast as a site published in partnership with the ISP provider.

Thank you for taking the time to read my comments.

Adreana Langston